OIL INVINGERS

Editor S. M. Herald.

My testimony to the efficacy of the Invingers Oil for the past year would be a painful attack of sciatica, which, as treatment on the part of my medical men was ineffectual, I was obliged to try this oil. My whole system very much benefited to give me the necessary strength to undergo the nearly every additional treatment which I have since received through applications, and the greatest of my pain has obtained complete relief. For a fortnight, I determined to apply this time the pain began to diminish, and I each application I experienced less pain as only a temporary relief. I was then that I was not to be discouraged, but I am now free from the pain. The success, however, is complete, and I am indebted to every author and invinger for the influence. What medical skill has been used, and I regard it as the greatest success.

Yours faithfully,

October 12, 1893. JOHN LAM.

Mr. McDONAGALL, called Mr. McDONAGALL, "I have occurred." It is, of course, for a barrister to try to shift the blame to the other side. But there is not a shadow of evidence to show that if the whole of the evidence had been taken into account, a catastrophe would have been averted. It was not one of them who were in the circumstances, or apprehended a catastrophe, there is nothing to show that the ship himself had any fault to find.

into the vessel, and had seen her coming over on them like a bird, till the port was open, and she became aware, and had during all that time given nobody any notice, but allowed captain and officers to lie asleep in their bunks, they would certainly have been very reckless men. But the evidence given at the inquest was to the effect that she was almost upright till she took the final inclination. By shifting the inquiry to England the Board of Trade lost the opportunity of re-examining and cross-examining the coilers on this point, and so they have accepted a lot of scientific evidence which assumes a state of things as to the existence of which there is no proof, and against the existence of which there is direct evidence. The evidence is to the effect that the men gave the alarm the moment they saw the danger, and that the inclination was so sudden that there was no time to see that everybody was awakened. The Wreck Commissioner, in summing up, is obliged to regret the absence of Mr. HADGON, the foreman of the coal trimmers, and in his absence he is obliged to indulge in suppositions and probabilities. He thinks it "probable" that the 120 tons was so put in that its centre of gravity was only 7 feet 2 inches from the side; he thinks it "probable" that the coal was being put in forward, and the after ports were lowered unseen; he thinks that, "perhaps," the man O'BRIEN, who says he looked at the ports when he heard a noise of water, and saw that they were all above water; did not look at the after ports. But why should a Judge deal in "probables" and "perhappes" when the living witnesses might have been examined to any extent? With the evidence so incomplete and unsatisfactory, we cannot help regarding this inquiry as a failure; and the scientific evidence taken in London does not in any way redeem it from that imputation.

Lloyd's surveyor seems to smile at the idea of captains understanding the doctrine of stability, and reminds us that a little knowledge is a dangerous thing. But no knowledge at all is certainly more dangerous, and it is perfectly clear that the captain was sent to sea in charge of a vessel with whose peculiarities he was not acquainted. He had positive orders not to dirty the decks by taking in coal over them, and he pumped the water-bull out in order to lift the coaling ports. In what he did he was ignorant rather than careless, and the chief engineer does not seem to have understood the danger any more than he did. There was in fact no one whatever in charge of the ship—neither captain, agent, nor engineer—who understood her stability, and the tendency of the experts' evidence is really towards making it necessary to have a scientific shipwright to sail with the ship. It certainly is not satisfactory to the public that splendid ships should be sent to sea in charge of men who have not the knowledge, and cannot be easily taught it, as to when the vessel is in danger of going to the bottom.

There is no royal road to learning, but that is no reason why we should not cover the too frequently rugged track with soft elastic turf for tender feet to tread, and embroider its borders with such bright and simple flowers as will have the effect of gladdening the eyes and awakening the latent sense of beauty in the minds of those who are scaling the heights upon which has been erected the temple of knowledge. There was a time when it was customary to assimilate the construction and aspect of a schoolroom as much as possible to those of a reception room in an old English parish workhouse, or of a wardroom in a hospital. Four bare walls, pierced by a number of openings for windows and a door, enclosed a boarded area filled with desks of uniform height and forms of uncompromising hardness. The latter were destitute of any support for the backs of boys and girls, at a time of life when the plastic and expanding spine is most sensitive to injury from the prolonged strain of a painful position; and the youthful pupil who happened to be tall, thin, and delicate of chest would be liable to a contraction of the lung-case and to a prejudicial compression of the pulmonary organs by having to bend over a lesson-book for several hours a day for many years in succession.

Happily, some of these evils have been remedied, and the laws of health, especially in regard to the young, are better understood and more frequently respected than they were in the days of Dr. BLIMBER, Mr. SQUEERS, and Miss JEMIMA PINKERTON, of the Mall, Chiswick. But hitherto very little attention has been paid to aesthetics in the schoolroom, because insufficient reflection has been bestowed upon the fact that no inconsiderable portion of the instruction we receive, both as children and as adults, comes to us—often unconsciously—through the eye. Of course, this is recognised in the kindergarten system, in which object lessons play so prominent a part. But these, which are excellent in their kind and degree, are necessarily limited in their scope. A wider application of the principle may be advantageously sought for; and with this object the Art for Schools Association has been established in the mother country, with Mr. RUSKIN for its President, and with Sir FREDERICK LEIGHTON, Mr. G. F. WATTS, Mr. ROBERT BROWNING, and Mr. MATTHEW ARNOLD, Mr. FORSTER, and Mr. MUNDELL as its active patrons. According to the prospectus of the association, the committee of management propose:—

1. To negotiate with art publishers for the purchase of prints, photographs, etchings, chromo-lithographs, &c., on advantageous terms, and to supply them at the lowest possible price to schools.
2. To reproduce from time to time, by one or more of the processes familiar to engravers and printers, carefully selected examples likely to have a large circulation.
3. To prepare a descriptive catalogue and price list of the examples which the committee are prepared to recommend to the notice of schools.
4. To present to schools, in special cases, and as the funds of the association shall allow, small collections, and books explanatory of them.
5. To arrange various loan collections, to be placed at the disposal of schools on such terms as may prove convenient.
6. To bring together a number of examples to be exhibited in a suitable place as a tentative model of a standard collection. The collection to consist of pictures of the simplest natural objects—birds and their nests and eggs, trees, wild flowers, and scenes of rural life, such as town children seldom see, and country children often fail to enjoy consciously, until their attention is specially called to them; pictures of animals in friendly relation with human beings, especially with children; pictures of the peasant and artisan life of our own and foreign countries; incidents of heroic adventure; &c.; pictures of architectural works of historic or artistic interest; landscapes and sea views; historical pictures; scenes from history; and last, but by no means least, such reproductions as are available of suitable subjects among the numerous works of the Italian, Dutch, and modern schools, especially of those in our English public galleries.

It is hardly necessary to point out the instructive, humanising, and elevating influences which would be exercised upon the plastic, impressionable, and receptive minds of children by causing them to be daily familiarised in the schoolroom with pictorial representations of objects, places, and events such as those enumerated above, altogether apart from the pleasure which these would communicate. By means of loan collections periodically replaced, a constant succession of these pictures and reproductions might be secured; and if it formed part of the teacher's duty to vary the ordinary routine of the school by offering an intelligible, lucid, and simple description of the works of art exhibited, combined with some elementary exposition of the rudimentary principles of drawing and design,—such, for example, as that which is presented by VIOLLET LE DUC in his admirable "Histoire d'un Dessinateur,"—it would help forward the education of the children, and agreeably diversify the drudgery of teaching. Everybody is familiar with the delight which almost all little folks take in picture-books; and it must be obvious that, by the methods indicated, this innate and unobscured sense of the beautiful might be materially stimulated and steadily unfolded; while, as regards the purely utilitarian aspect of the matter, there is an infinite deal to be said in favour of pictorial object lessons. For what literary description of the Pyramids, of St. Peter's at Rome, of Cologne Cathedral, of the Acropolis at Athens, of the Taj at Agra, of the Alps, the Andes, or the Himalayas, could give so vivid an idea of these mountains on the one hand, or of those architectural monuments on the other, as some of the large-sized photographs in which they are portrayed with such startling accuracy by the sun? And so with the great men, and the noble deeds which have illustrated human history: we seem to come nearer to them, and to know them better, when we have seen their "counterfeit presentments." This is more especially the case at that period of life when the senses are quicker to receive, and the memory is more eager to retain external impressions. For it is well known to all who have studied middle phenomena, and have passed the middle term of human life, that there are no pictures hung up, so to speak, in the chambers of the brain, so fresh in colour, or so durable in texture, as those which were deposited there by the keen, inquiring, curious, and acquisitive vision of childhood and of early youth.

And as "the boy is father to the man," the love of the beautiful thus implanted in the minds of the young, while occupants of the schoolroom, would be likely to become a permanent influence and possession, suggesting and providing sources and methods of enjoyment differing from, and superior to, the coarse and material pleasures which are most in vogue among certain classes of society, while, at the same time, stimulating inquiry and enlarging the mental horizon. Not only so, but, as is often the case, the latent germ of a talent for design should be found slumbering in some of the pupils, it would be quickened into life and activity by the observation of such pictures as those described above, and the impulse to imitate them would be naturally experienced, just as STODART'S artistic faculty was stirred by seeing some of the engraved heads of HOUDESSON; as CARLO MARATTA in his childhood felt the first incentive to become a painter by gazing on the frescoes which adorned a church; and as the fire of genius was kindled in FUSKEI, by the sight of some engraved copies of the marvellous sculptures of MICHAEL ANGELO.

Photographs and chromo-lithographs art have so cheapened the production of pictures and the reproduction of natural objects, as to enable a picture gallery of the kind proposed by the Art for Schools Association, at a very moderate outlay; and our purpose in calling attention to this project in the mother country is to suggest whether something of the kind would not be practicable among ourselves, not by State aid, but by private effort. The experiment might be commenced in a single school, with the co-operation of a sympathetic and capable teacher; and if it should turn out to have—as we believe it would—a humanising, recreative, and educational effect upon the pupils, the extension of the system would be a mere question of time and funds.

Whatever may be the fact about the loose condition of keys on the railway, the bare suspicion that there may be something wrong, which may pass undetected by the people employed to detect it, is not pleasant. The significance of the reports appears from the fact that one of them comes from Katoomba and the other from Summer Hill. These places are far apart, and if things are not right at them, the thought occurs that they may be wrong in many other places as well. The letter referring to Katoomba was sufficiently specific. Either things are as that letter stated them to be, or an unwelcome hoax or scare on the public has been attempted. Mr. DAY, who had given information to the MINISTER on Wednesday evening, stated in the House on Thursday that he had that morning examined the rails at Summer Hill and found that missing keys had just been replaced. It is almost unaccountable that with the arrangements supposed to be in force, such lapses as this should happen. Every foot of the railway line is supposed to be inspected at stated intervals; but if the inspection takes place from the back window of a guard van, such trains as keys may easily be overlooked. The organisation supposed to be carried out should not only make it impossible for any considerable number of these keys to be displaced, but should also enable the MINISTER to obtain a report on the subject within twelve hours at the most. The security of the line depends in part only upon the keys being well fixed; and when men have grown over-familiar with doing what to them may appear to be unnecessary, they are not unlikely to become inattentive. The state of the permanent way, one would suppose is so important a matter, that it should be reported on almost daily, and that at the shortest notice the MINISTER should be able to tell what is the condition of every section of it. Everybody will hope that the alarm raised has no much fact to warrant it; but if there is as much truth in it as there appears to be, it is better to know it all and to be well alarmed, than to go on in a false security till awakened by a great disaster. The accident at Cabramatta may, perhaps, be now explained. If not properly keyed, the permanent way may have yielded sufficiently to let an engine run off, and yet show nothing, as it was said, that could have led to the accident. There will be some anxiety to see the report called for by Mr. WILKINSON.

Mr. WILKINSON, when commencing his speech on the Land Bill, said that he had intended to bring forward some reasons to show the necessity for a change in the present laws; but that previous speakers had done this so well that his way had been made easy in that respect. The result was shorter and a better speech from the hon. member. If those who are to follow him will take the hint and imitate such a good example, there is hope that before long the House will come to a second reading of the bill. By this time it is clear enough that the country has demanded a change in the law. Whether this stage of the debate it is a waste of time to pile up facts and arguments to prove what few persons dare to doubt. Hon. members might shorten their utterances still further by omitting all that properly belongs to committee, and not to second reading. Principles are to be discussed now, details by-and-by. If the debate were confined to the radical principles of the measure, it might be less interesting, but it would be shorter and more Parliamentary. Unfortunately for some hon. members, they represent constituencies which expect them to speak. Their speeches are duly published by the local papers; and up to a certain point this is right enough. But making any number a mere delegate, constitutions have a right to know what their representatives say, and to judge them by their words. But this sort of thing may go altogether too far; and hon. members when speaking on the Land Bill may turn their backs on the country, and face only the question; and at this point they are right enough. PURE ALDERNEY CATTLE, at WOOLLEN'S YARDS,

577-STREET SYDNEY.

TUESDAY, December 4th, 1893, at 2.30 p.m. sharp.

WILL, CLARK, and CO. are instructed by Mr. John A. Vales, of Westfield, Victoria, to sell by auction as follows, the assignment of his now well-known Alderney cattle, comprising—
13 pure cows and heifers, nearly all of which are in full lactation, and others close calving
2 pure Alderney bulls.

The above cattle are described as the best dairy of this justly-famous breed that has yet been imported from England, being selected by the late Mr. J. A. Vales, of Westfield, Victoria, and are mounted on iron or ball, and as usually of extraordinary quality, neither being used for any other purpose.

They will be on view some few days before sale, and inspection particularly invited.

Intelligence will be forwarded on application, or may be had at
